

CHAPTER ONE

THE BOY WHO LIVED

Mr. and Mrs. Dursley, of number four, Privet Drive, were proud to say that they were perfectly normal, thank you very much. They were the last people you would expect to be involved in anything strange, because they simply did not hold with such nonsense.

The owl swooped low over the garden wall, hung there a moment in the cold air, and then went swooping back over the hedge and out of sight behind the chimney pots.

"I WANT MY LETTER!" he shouted.

SEIZE HIM!

They had a small son called Dudley and in their opinion there was no finer boy anywhere in the whole of the world, which was a view nobody outside the house had ever been heard to share.

r. and Mrs. Dursley, of number four, Privet Drive, were proud to say that they were perfectly normal, thank you very much. They were the last people you would expect to be involved in anything strange, because they simply did not hold with such nonsense.

The owl swooped low over the garden wall, hung there a moment in the cold air, and then went swooping back over the hedge and out of sight behind the chimney pots.

"I WANT MY LETTER!" he shouted.

SEIZE HIM!

They had a small son called Dudley and in their opinion there was no finer boy anywhere in the whole of the world, which was a view nobody outside the house had ever been heard to share.

CHAPTER ONE

Mr. and Mrs. Dursley, of number four, Privet Drive, were proud to say that they were perfectly normal, thank you very much. They were the last people you would expect to be involved in anything strange, because they simply did not hold with such nonsense.

The owl swooped low over the garden wall, hung there a moment in the cold air, and then went swooping back over the hedge and out of sight behind the chimney pots.

"I WANT MY LETTER!" he shouted.

SEIZE HIM!

They had a small son called Dudley and in their opinion there was no finer boy anywhere in the whole of the world, which was a view nobody outside the house had ever been heard to share.

CHAPTER TWO

THE VANISHING GLASS

Mr. and Mrs. Dursley, of number four, Privet Drive, were proud to say that they were perfectly normal, thank you very much. They were the last people you would expect to be involved in anything strange, because they simply did not hold with such nonsense.

The owl swooped low over the garden wall, hung there a moment in the cold air, and then went swooping back over the hedge and out of sight behind the chimney pots.

"I WANT MY LETTER!" he shouted.

SEIZE HIM!

They had a small son called Dudley and in their opinion there was no finer boy anywhere in the whole of the world, which was a view nobody outside the house had ever been heard to share.

CHAPTER TWO

Mr. and Mrs. Dursley, of number four, Privet Drive, were proud to say that they were perfectly normal, thank you very much. They were the last people you would expect to be involved in anything strange, because they simply did not hold with such nonsense.

The owl swooped low over the garden wall, hung there a moment in the cold air, and then went swooping back over the hedge and out of sight behind the chimney pots.

"I WANT MY LETTER!" he shouted.

SEIZE HIM!

They had a small son called Dudley and in their opinion there was no finer boy anywhere in the whole of the world, which was a view nobody outside the house had ever been heard to share.

r. and Mrs. Dursley, of number four, Privet Drive, were proud to say that they were perfectly normal, thank you very much. They were the last people you would expect to be involved in anything strange, because they simply did not hold with such nonsense.

The owl swooped low over the garden wall, hung there a moment in the cold air, and then went swooping back over the hedge and out of sight behind the chimney pots.

"I WANT MY LETTER!" he shouted.

SEIZE HIM!

They had a small son called Dudley and in their opinion there was no finer boy anywhere in the whole of the world, which was a view nobody outside the house had ever been heard to share.

CHAPTER THREE

THE LETTERS FROM NO ONE

Mr. and Mrs. Dursley, of number four, Privet Drive, were proud to say that they were perfectly normal, thank you very much. They were the last people you would expect to be involved in anything strange, because they simply did not hold with such nonsense.

The owl swooped low over the garden wall, hung there a moment in the cold air, and then went swooping back over the hedge and out of sight behind the chimney pots.

"I WANT MY LETTER!" he shouted.

SEIZE HIM!

They had a small son called Dudley and in their opinion there was no finer boy anywhere in the whole of the world, which was a view nobody outside the house had ever been heard to share.

r. and Mrs. Dursley, of number four, Privet Drive, were proud to say that they were perfectly normal, thank you very much. They were the last people you would expect to be involved in anything strange, because they simply did not hold with such nonsense.

The owl swooped low over the garden wall, hung there a moment in the cold air, and then went swooping back over the hedge and out of sight behind the chimney pots.

"I WANT MY LETTER!" he shouted.

SEIZE HIM!

They had a small son called Dudley and in their opinion there was no finer boy anywhere in the whole of the world, which was a view nobody outside the house had ever been heard to share.

CHAPTER THREE

Mr. and Mrs. Dursley, of number four, Privet Drive, were proud to say that they were perfectly normal, thank you very much. They were the last people you would expect to be involved in anything strange, because they simply did not hold with such nonsense.

The owl swooped low over the garden wall, hung there a moment in the cold air, and then went swooping back over the hedge and out of sight behind the chimney pots.

"I WANT MY LETTER!" he shouted.

SEIZE HIM!

They had a small son called Dudley and in their opinion there was no finer boy anywhere in the whole of the world, which was a view nobody outside the house had ever been heard to share.